KOCHI: The Southern Naval Command (SNC), which is the training command of the Indian Navy, will sign a memorandum of understanding (MoU) with Amrita Vishwa Vidyapeetham, Coimbatore, on Wednesday to enable academic and research collaboration.

The decision is part of Navy's tie-ups with institutions of excellence to further the training and research collaboration on mutually agreed domains and also benefit from the faculty expertise available with the universities.

Vice Admiral A K Chawla, Flag Officer Commanding-in-Chief, SNC, and P Venkat Rangan, vice-chancellor, Amrita Vishwa Vidyapeetham, will sign the MoU at a function at the university campus in Coimbatore. The MoU would encompass mechanical engineering, electronics and communication, computer science and other areas of mutual interest such as bio science, medical and cyber security.

"The aim is to leverage the potential of external expertise in technical and mechanical domains and to nurture a collaborative training model with an aim to provide the trainees with the highest academic standards. It also focuses on providing quality training to Navy personnel. The MoU will enable the university to recognise courses and programmes offered by the 33 training establishments of the Indian Navy across India," a Navy spokesperson said.

The Navy often sponsors its personnel to do additional courses that are considered beneficial for the force. Also, the Navy often require academic assistance to do specific research and development programmes and these institutions will help to fulfill them, he added.
